

Peter Lurie, MD, MPH

*Deputy Director
Public Citizens Health Research Group*

Peter Lurie, MD, MPH is Deputy Director of Public Citizen's Health Research Group, a Ralph Nader-founded advocacy group in Washington, DC. During his academic career he wrote about needle exchange programs, ethical aspects of mother-to-infant HIV transmission studies and HIV vaccine trials in developing countries and the impact of economic development policies upon the spread of HIV. At Public Citizen, he has been involved in FDA regulatory policies, conflict of interest policy, efforts to ban or relabel multiple drugs and medical devices, to reduce worker exposure to hexavalent chromium and beryllium and to lower medical resident work hours.